A common feature of acute myeloid leukemia (AML) is the development of resistance to chemotherapy. We investigated the expression of the multidrug resistance (MDR) proteins P-glycoprotein (P-gp) and MRP1 in AML blasts, and their association with the risk of relapse. We analyzed the expression of these proteins in 103 AML blasts by flow cytometry, and compared the results with those of other MDR proteins (multidrug resistance-related protein 1, LRP; multidrug resistance-associated protein 1, MRAP1; and lung resistance protein, LRP). The drug efflux rate in the blasts was expressed as the median fluorescence intensity of an anti-fluorescein isothiocyanate-conjugated monoclonal antibody and compared with the expression of other MDR proteins. The patients were followed up prospectively for the presence of relapse. P-gp and MRP1 were expressed by > or =85% of the AML blasts. P-gp, MRP1, and LRP were highly expressed in AML with t(8;21)(q22;q22.3), whereas LRP was expressed in AML with inv(16)(p13.1q22), t(15;17)(q22;q21).
